Let's turn our attention back to the question below. Caring for children is probably the most important job in any society. Because of this, all mothers and fathers should be required to take a course that prepares them to be good parents. To what extent do you agree or disagree with this view? Here's a possible introduction for a 'completely disagree' essay: It is true that parents shoulder a huge responsibility and that raising children is by no means an easy task. However, I completely disagree with the idea that we should therefore force all mothers and fathers to attend parenting courses. How to write a conclusion: The easiest way to write a conclusion is to paraphrase the introduction that you have already written. Start with "In conclusion", and write one sentence that summarises your answer. Can you rewrite my introduction as a one-sentence conclusion? Students often ask me what's the best way to write an introduction if you're aiming for a high band score. I always tell ... Let's be honest, grammar is hard and kind of boring. But it's important! A good conclusion is not just a summary of information presented in your essay, but also helps emphasise the importance of the main points or opinions in your essay and gives the reader a sense of closure. When writing a conclusion (closing paragraph) in Writing Task 2, there are a few things that you should do (or avoid) in order to make your conclusion a more effective one. Knowing what to include or avoid in your closing paragraph can help you get a higher band score in IELTS Writing. So, let's look at some tips you can practice and implement in your response. You may want to think of your introduction and conclusion as two pieces of the same puzzle because they should be closely linked. Make sure you return to the idea(s) that you presented in your introduction. And add further insight obtained after writing the body of your essay. It is very important to provide a summary of your essay's main points in your conclusion. But make sure you avoid repeating things. Instead, show the examiner how the arguments you made and the supporting details you used all fit together. When summarising the main points in your essay, don't repeat the language you use in your body paragraphs. Vary your language so that you don't repeat the same words and sentence structures again and again. This will show the examiner that you can use a wider range of vocabulary and grammatical structures. In Writing Task 2, you will always be asked to give your opinion in essay form. If you get to your final paragraph and realise that you haven't given your opinion, make sure you include it in your conclusion so your opinion is clear. Make sure you do not raise new points in your conclusion. Remember that your closing paragraph is where you bring closure to your essay and not where you introduce new ideas. Now that we have looked at strategies for writing an effective conclusion, let's see how these strategies work together to bring an essay to a cohesive end. Take a look at the sample question, sample introductory paragraph and conclusion below. And see how this test taker has put the 5 tips mentioned into action to write a cohesive conclusion.The threat of nuclear weapons maintains world peace. Nuclear power provides cheap and clean energy. The benefits of nuclear technology far outweigh the disadvantages. To what extent do you agree or disagree? Give reasons for your answer and include any relevant examples from your own knowledge or experience. Write at least 250 words. Nuclear technology has been around for many years. Whether this technology is used for weapons of mass destruction or as a source of energy, many are of the belief that the use of nuclear energy has more advantages than disadvantages. In my opinion, nuclear technology can indeed be a very efficient energy source. However, nuclear weapons possess such enormous destructive power that any benefits that this technology may offer to humankind are not enough to counter its potentially devastating effects. This essay will address why the drawbacks of nuclear technology outweigh the benefits and will include relevant examples to support this position. Nuclear technology is extremely dangerous. Even though nuclear weapons have only been used twice, on the Japanese cities of Hiroshima and Nagasaki, evidence from these actions, as well as from nuclear accidents such as the Chernobyl disaster, are irrefutable proof of the disastrous effects of nuclear technology. Even in the absence of nuclear accidents, nuclear power inevitably produces radioactive waste, which is severely damaging to our bodies. Our best protection against these dangers is to simply not use nuclear technology. Instead, we should look for alternative ways to produce sustainable energy and to achieve world peace through spreading a message of tolerance, kindness and non-violence. If you review the main points in the example conclusion above: The destructive power of nuclear weapons The disastrous consequences of nuclear disasters The harmful effects of radioactive waste. You will see the writer reminds the examiner (reader) the strength and importance of their main ideas, while summarising how this point fit well with the examples provided in the body of the essay. To finish, you can see the writer highlights their proposed course of action, which helps end the essay on a more positive note. Test takers often write too much or too little. Sometimes they struggle to write anything at all. Many students overthink these paragraphs, especially the introduction, and try to write all the most impressive grammar and vocabulary they know. So, just how important are the writing task 2 introduction and conclusion? What makes a solid introduction and how do you write a good conclusion? Find out below. Introductions The importance of the introduction Everyone knows that introductions are necessary for the IELTS writing task 2 essay but most people don't know why or what the introduction should include. The introduction is truly a vital section of the essay. Without one, you will not get any higher than band score 5 in Coherence and Cohesion. For the purposes of IELTS, your essay introduction is the examiner's first impression of your writing. It should allow the examiner to approximate where your band score might be. So, an examiner will understand, upon reading your introduction, if your IELTS essay is a 6-7, a 5-6 or a 7-8. You will not be scored only on your introduction, of course, but it is important to write a strong introduction that is accurate, concise and uses solid grammar and vocabulary. What the IELTS Essay introduction must contain As mentioned earlier, many test-takers overthink the introduction and end up writing too much. What should a good introduction contain? Less than you think! rephrasing of the prompt/your position Rephrasing the prompt is an important element of the IELTS Essay introduction. Not only does it show the examiner you have understood the question but it also shows your ability to successfully use novel vocabulary. What should never be missing from the introduction is your position, yet this is frequently what keeps students from getting the band score they need. Your position Each IELTS writing prompt has a question or command. These include: So, what is your position? Your direct response to any of those about commands/ questions. Your response needs to be clear and direct. Essentially, you need to directly answer the question in the introduction. Why? What the band descriptors say At band 7 under Task Achievement we see, "presents a clear position throughout the response." The keyword here is throughout. Throughout means from the beginning to the end. So, it is important that you make your position clear as early as your introduction if you hope to score 7 in Task achievement and this can be done when you answer the question in the introduction. How do you rephrase the task? Try using synonyms and different sentence structures to convey a similar meaning. Do you have to rephrase every word? You do not have to rephrase every word. Sometimes when test takers try to rephrase everything the result is very unnatural text. What you want to avoid is copying chunks of text. Chunks are phrases or groups of words. Below is a sample IELTS writing task 2 prompt. Communication through text messaging and other forms of instant online communication are short and basic. Some people think this will be the death of grammar and spelling. To what extent do you agree or disagree? Sample introduction Nowadays, across the world, most people use text messages to communicate quickly and effectively. The speed of this communication, however, carries with it the risk of losing basic writing skills. In my opinion, this is a valid concern, given the minimal opportunity we have for proper writing these days, yet correct language usage will continue. How is the prompt rephrased? Communication through text messaging and other forms of instant online communication are short and basic. ->Nowadays, across the world, most people use text messages to communicate quickly and effectively. Some people think this will be the death of grammar and spelling. -> The speed of this communication, however, carries with it the risk of losing basic writing skills. The position The writer's position shows partial agreement and briefly explains why: In my opinion, this is a valid concern, with the minimal opportunity we have for proper writing these days, yet correct language usage will continue. Notice that in the introduction, not all the words were rephrased: communication, text messages and writing were not rephrased. However, no chunks of words were copied from the essay prompt and novel vocabulary was used. Does the IELTS essay introduction need anything more? Some students believe they need to write an extra sentence in their introduction, indicating that the essay will include evidence to support their arguments. For example: This essay will address this issue, using examples and evidence to support my opinion. Most IELTS examiners find this kind of sentence unnecessary as it doesn't add anything vital to the introduction and many times seems like a memorised phrase. Remember that examiners are trained to spot memorized language so use language that is fairly academic but natural in your IELTS essay. How introductions can go wrong See the task below: The Internet provides us with information about life and cultures of different countries, and some people say it is not necessary to visit these countries to learn about them. To what extent do you agree or disagree with this statement? Give your opinion and relevant examples. Here is a sample introduction: With the internet so prevalent today, some people believe it is no longer necessary to visit countries to learn about them. The internet provides us with information about different countries. I agree completely with this statement. In this essay, I will explain my viewpoint, discussing the negatives of travel. Why it's problematic: Chunks of language are copied from the promptThe language is choppy - sentences are not linked together fluentlyThe task 2 prompt does not ask you to discuss the negatives of travel. It wants to know if the internet has made it unnecessary to visit other countries. Conclusions The importance of the conclusion A good conclusion provides closure to your IELTS writing task 2. It should restate the main position you described in the introduction and leave the reader with a thoughtful but more general idea. Without a conclusion you cannot score above a band score of 5 in coherence and cohesion. The conclusion is the last thing your examiner reads so it needs to be concise, accurate and without superfluous information. How to write a good conclusion restate your position/with a thought-provoking idea or prediction Restatement of your position In your conclusion, you must first start off with your position. In many IELTS essays this means that you must give your opinion again. This should not be written though with the same language used in the introduction or in the body paragraphs. Novel vocabulary and different grammar should be included. Thought-provoking idea or prediction Leave the reader with something to think about on the topic. This could be a more general statement about how the essay topic affects the world more broadly or what you think may happen in the future with the issue in the essay. What conclusions should not contain IELTS essay conclusions should never include new ideas. Any new ideas you want to write should be incorporated into the body paragraphs. Below is the sample IELTS writing task 2 prompt seen previously. Communication through text messaging and other forms of instant online communication are short and basic. Some people think this will be the death of grammar and spelling. To what extent do you agree or disagree? Sample conclusion To conclude, while there is a risk of diluting language through continuous use of text messaging, I believe that this can be avoided. If we, as a society, continue reading regularly and consciously, language will survive and flourish. Why it is a good conclusion The conclusion is brief - only two sentences long - but it incorporates the elements necessary to score well in IELTS writing task 2.The position is clearly stated -> while there is a risk of diluting language through continuous use of text messaging, I believe that this can be avoided.There is a prediction for the future related to the essay topic ->If we, as a society, continue reading regularly and consciously, language will survive and flourish. Advanced vocabulary is used -> diluting, continuous, consciously, flourishAdvanced grammar is used in both sentences. How conclusions can go wrong Below is a sample IELTS writing task 2 prompt seen above. The Internet provides us with information about life and cultures of different countries, and some people say it is not necessary to visit these countries to learn about them. To what extent do you agree or disagree with this statement? Give your opinion and relevant examples. Here is a sample conclusion To conclude, travel is expensive, dangerous and time-consuming. We should avoid traveling and spend time with our friends and family instead. Recent studies have shown that when children spend time with their parents, both recorded feelings of well-being. In the future we will spend more time with our parents. Why it's problematic The writing task was not about the negatives of travelThe writer introduces new ideas in the conclusionThere is a prediction but it is not related to the taskNo conclusions can be drawn on the actual issue in the prompt because the response is off topic Here is another example that is representative of a band 7 To conclude, I believe the internet provides endless sources of information about the world around us but it can never replace travel fully. No internet site or application has yet to provide the transformative experience of travel nor do I think it ever will. Why it is a good conclusion The conclusion is brief - only two sentences long - but it incorporates the main points necessary to score well in IELTS writing task 2.The position is clearly stated -> I believe the internet provides endless sources of information about the world around us but it can never replace travel fully,There is a more general, thought-provoking idea related to the essay topic -> No internet site or application has yet to provide the transformative experience of travel nor do I think it ever will. Advanced vocabulary is used -> transformative experienceAdvanced grammar is used. Conclusion Both the introduction and conclusion are vital components of IELTS writing task 2. They should be brief but well-structured. They should be concise so that you can dedicate more time to your body paragraphs. Most importantly, they should answer the question so that the position is clear.
